

Then boldly we strode off into the unknown!

Unlike "pointless Pisaua" this did not end in the a slack well after 6 feet.

We were soon crawling to overtake one another in the walking country passage. It terminated after about ~~less than~~ 50m in a muddy chamber where the "stream" in the floor disappeared into a tiny hole the even Tid-Sear indicated was hopeless.

I guess this is a flood passage that filled with muddy waters in spring, and the little "stream" in the floor is the last remains of the vanishing water.

We then looked at all the side passages. Most lead uphill into regions where the roof must space gets too small. The mud is very diggable - possibly a tunnel could be dug forward just under the roof.

Eventually we stopped running around the cement ferrets & found we had one lead left. This lead up into a boulder-roofed chamber with a rubble slope & a great slope, & as I went up the rubble slope, found lots of rusty choked holes with doips coming in. I nearly died for myself coming back down, showering Tid-Sear with rocks & scaring the wits out of all of us. Especially me.

Tim had a look at the mud slope. One way out wonture. The other went up! see

We looked at our watches & went "home".

After a thanksgiving supper that couldnt be beat, - sleep, we were early at 1:30 pm, and left Nicelle to guard the camp against the determined ~~tattooing~~ cat - Burglars & various alligators for which the Picos is famous -

A bolt was put in at the base of the mud slope, & Tim went up, "Protected" by a rope.

After a while, I said "I went up, - up, - up -

At the top is a region of big boulders; it really does feel like the top of a ~~big~~ <sup>old</sup> church!
~~really~~ There is no loose craggy rocky stuff up here.
We looked at various climbs of out of here.
But we didn't have any more rope, & just wen got exposed.

We wanted to be most porous for the next lot., went back to camp & saved Nicelle from previous dementia from darkness & dogs.

Then the top out -- about what I shall say nothing as I have you on long enough already.

Thank you for your attention.

Economical too.

22nd July Monday 53/5

William, Chas

A slow start to the day. After sitting around waiting to find out what happened to the campers, I carried on sitting around since no-one else felt like surveying shagging the Hedgehog. Then William walked up from Los Lagos having arrived the night before, & the two of us eventually set off down the hill at 2:40 pm. <sup>actually 2:40 pm</sup> I really just wanted to see what the coffin lid looked like - when I had seen it before it was a ridiculous sit with a ridiculous hedge boulder in it, completely hopeless without hammering or so I thought. But no - a beautifully elegant down, up, over, down & squeeze along series of manoeuvres had been created by some nutter, with what must have been a tremendous sensation breaking out into the large pitchy head beyond. Anyway, we found the way down & started surveying at the bottom of the pitch before shagging the h, with little enthusiasm & even less speed. But we eventually achieved what we had set out to do, & almost felt like trying to do some pushing. But the only hammer was at the foot of the first pitch, so we pissed off out, just failing to walk up before dark. Marched a surprisingly edible raw chick pea and lentil salad by Sir Robert around midnight.

Area 14 Dave B.

Went to the Valley where I thought I might find 5/4 - 9/4. Think I probably found 2 of them, but only the checked 2. The interesting 2 remain unfound. This is partly due to none of them being marked (check).

Hmmm...

Found a ledge very, very high up on Cabazon del Valle which overlooks Valle Extreme etc.

23/7

Enlarged Shaggy the Hedgehog & the squeeze into the top of the rift, then spent time hammering the next squeeze. Eventually got through, and then down past through another squeeze (now destroyed). Ahead the rifts continue reasonably open. The top squeeze still needs enlarging a bit. Met Jenny and Tim on the way out. Found a small inlet entering a bit below the 2 hardest squeezes, hammered it a bit, but wasn't enthusiastic enough to enter it.

26 July William, Paul Flann

After lunch on a festuous day looked for Optimists. ~~This cave is~~ patchy mist. This cave is very hard to locate in the mist (sa 1982 log). So instead Paul found a 5m deep rift with a further  $1\frac{1}{2}$  second deep  $\frac{1}{4}$  mile due N of Arjo. By now much mist, so concealed ourselves with building cairn there. On the of valley looking away from Arjo. I'm not sure what area it is. William

25/7/91

Went to Llano las Cuevas. (Cross Cabeza Corn-Cabeza Julagua ridge, and follow valley down to a large bowl). Various interesting caves.

- a) Large cleft in R wall, marked SIE 85 ⊗ 15m shaft. Worth looking at.
- b) In centre of bowl, below @, 9/4. Also marked SIE 85 ⊗. Unbottomed by ONCC
- c) 100m SE (down valley) from 9/4 is 7/4, and an unnumbered shaft marked ONCC 88 ⊗
- d) ⊗ in 10m diameter shakehole 40m SE of 7/4 is 5/4 (unbottomed)
- e) From ridge forming bottom edge of bowl, a walk-in cave can be seen on the R side of the valley with smaller entrances above. Further down on the R is a larger entrance a, b, d and e need looking at. Also 10/4 and 11/4 which are supposedly near by. The continuation of the valley also looks promising. According to John Wilcock, 2/7 goes under here.

5.30ish 25/7/91

Tony arrives and announces his return from a camping trip with his usual phrase "There's no particular problem or panic but..." This time the campers coming out know that there's virtually no paraffin to speak of. So poor Paul is stuck @ the entrance to 2/7 waiting for it having come back out from the mts. There is only one person for the mercy dash to deliver paraffin + tea and its ME, expdr blot who has not been to 2/7 this year and who is NOT FIT. Rats, sort out container as NO SUITABLE CONTAINER @ Ario [Jam jar / log roll / BDH]. Go immediately

To '90', do not pass collect £200, but run like an idiot to 2/7. Get lost on the boulders, wrack memory desperately back to 1988. Get to the point of screaming bloody ~~B~~ ~~B~~ ~~B~~ing frustration & tears, finally decide to drop down a few feet, ~~at~~ AT LAST spot cairns. Get into sun, puffing like an idiot. Up to 2/7 @ 19.10 left Ario 18.30-ish. Left Paul @ 19.45, arrived Ario @ 20.30, relieved after dreadful run down Jor La Cistre where weather was desperate, given onion soup and goodies by Richard + Gairn, bliss bliss. My feet hurt like hell, but I feel like I've done my best. A satisfying day after which I will sleep very well thank-you.

4th camp 22/7-25/7 Those who can, do. Those who can't, write about it.

Canal de Trea Richard + Gairn

Gairn soaked up the bullshit and agreed to come. Essentially the question is - where does the ancient stream that carved 2/7 high levels - where did it resurge? somewhere between Huerta del Rey and Culiembra at an altitude of c. 1000-1100 metres. Now, there is a cave marked on the map on the canal de Trea called Cuartelles at 1050 m; could it be the ancient exit?

Off we went to look at it. An hours walk down the terrible canal de Trea to find that Cuartelles isn't a cave at all - it's more like an amphitheatre full of sheep shit. The interesting thing is that the front of the scoop (for such Cuartelles could well be described) has unusual sedimentary rocks + pebbles glued together by calcite, such as only seem to be found underground. Gairn and I sat on the grass and I asked 'Are we looking at the ancient 2/7 resurgence, long abandoned, long filled in?' Both of us said no so we trashed off up the hill again.

23rd July 1991.

Tir, Jenny. S3/5.

Met Gav in on his way out after pushing S3/5's next squeeze - a nasty vertical twist. ~~Then~~ we continued through this and into what Gav had described as "wide open rift" to find another squeeze - the last straw. Tried to go underneath to start with, but the entry is much <sup>less</sup> pleasant than it looks so tried going over the top. Farther to harbor, this led eventually to a right-hand bend, and more tight rift. It's hard going.

25th July 1991.

Tir, William. S3/5

A lots of little bits up. ②

① boared up the two inlets at the junction down Bearfoot Pterodactyl. The leftmost closes down. The ~~other~~ next is parallel to a mad chamber which ~~boars~~ has a rift over the top. This probably continues to entrance of the barrels, but Tir only pushed as far as the a point above the chamber needs ~~to~~ surveying.

② "Wolf's home" - William found a silly little phreatic bubble chamber with a circular hole into it in Shores rift just before the inlet, and on the left. Great for tourists - sort of place Dige and John could set up a tea stall and sell flings.

③ "Wolf's Bypass" - The inlet (see ②) leads through a few squeezes and a constriction to a short up (described by William as "very exposed"), a couple of chockey cranks, and you appear back in the bottom of pterodactyl. This is a more direct route (but difficult) into the bottom of shores.

- ④ Attempted to climb in the shattered character at the base of the second pitch, but things either went nowhere, or I get too scared. It may still be possible to get way over the top of Rodula rift by climbing up through start legs. Daddy short legs inlet and on up high in the rift. This showed he had died.
- ⑤ Survey of Daddy short legs - A testimony to willians persistence and thoroughness: he refused to "race the runner nation" to make things easier, and made his very arduous. One of our survey legs was 83cm long W.
- ⑥ Climbed up high into the rift above P.P.P. in an attempt to rig a pendulum access to the far side. Beautiful formations, with 2 soft stalagmites high in the rift. This belonged to a large church, and descended down onto the character, to find that the 30m rope wasn't nearly as long as he had thought. Still it was sufficient to manage the pendulum over to the far side, and look briefly at the shattered inlet in the hope of finding large passage and a source for S3/S3's big draught. This looked at the upper 2 levels, finding a couple of small cracks on (horizon advised) - the best over a huge rock lens. But I couldn't get to the lower level - which may go more easily. This really needs a rope belted down, ~~but~~ so that the route will be down into ~~the~~, ~~the~~ Pukka pashmina, and up the other side. This will alleviate the need to use the ~~pendulum~~ <sup>approximate</sup> Polish prussing pendulum. Shocked to discover that our pendulum rope was Polish & fit only for footlegs + removing boulders from squeezes.

Another startlingly hot day @ And as the day rises and the wind drops

Friday 26th July Looking for Optimisto - The creation of Area II.

Decided to take another look for Optimisto with zero success.

Did, however find a few other holes.

Define Area II as back end of Area S, the other side of the ridge from Refugio de Cabeza Nera - Cabeza Julagua in large bowl, which goes steeply upwards Cabeza Nera. On area marked Tous de tro ~~Caves 3/II to 6/II are close to path marked on Colored map which runs NW from Ario close along the bottom of a green valley. Path is parallel to Los Lagos Park. 4/II to 6/II are in direct setting close to Rio.~~

1/II = Optimisto = 30/S (NOT Red circle cave)

I still can't find it!

2/II = Paul Raun's Cave (see entry of 24/July) unmarked.

3/II Caves 3/II to 6/II are close to path running NNW from tro parallel to Los Lagos path below Sod 4. 3/II is furthest from tro.

3/II Sun Bearing from Cabeza Forma 156° from Cabeza Julagua 112°

Small bedding crawl at base of cliff <sup>5'</sup> above col. on lhs. 50' above green col. Probably closed.

4/II Cabeza Forma 164° Cabeza Julagua 106° A most unlikely entrance. obvious wide crawl at foot of 20' deep & 30' across green basin at foot of valley no path. 100m nearer Ario than 3/II.

5/II Open - Cza Forma 183° Cabeza Julagua 103° Obvious shaft on the N side (downward slope) at foot of valley. Marked Ø by SIE. Goes to sawn plug. unmarked.

6/II Sheep shelter at base of 6ft high cliff 10m above 5/II.

7/II Cabeza Forma 196° Cabeza Julagua 123 131° Porton del Rubusto 337° Sheep shit cave. Large feature no cairn on col overlooking steep drop to Pozo los Texos. Wall down boulder slope to foot of 40' cliff. Floor covered in sheep shit. Crawl leads off. Ugh!

8/II Perched Boulder Cave Cabeza Julagua 126° Cabeza Forma 227° ?Cabeza de los Campesinos 300° This is almost on top of cairned ridge running NW from Cabeza Julagua, just on the N side (away from Ario) no cairns. Large obvious entrance with perched boulder over top, too pointed in entrance & bushes growing. Faded SIE mark 84 Ø <sup>(Being 340)</sup> So I didn't add an over one. Ca 5m down to another perched boulder then see more floor.

Rift then also bears 340. This one's a must!

53/5 Richard + Steve After coming out of the cave (undescended owing to steatopigies on part of RH) we, too, walked into area 4 led by Michelle. Climbed up Cabeza Verde & the next one along, & in a cr between latter & Cabeza Llambria we had a look at a shaft entrance that we now know to be 12/4. It is clear from the situation of this cave and from the description by Gamin that it requires further attention. We also were afforded rather spectacular views over the Valle Extremos and area 10. In the middle of this, on a broken piece of ground at the head of el Reguexon we could see an obvious entrance, and one which would obviously be invisible from any other place. This entrance is in a position almost too good to be true - ie just beyond Huerta del Rey, overlooking the head of the rest of 2/7. After dinner Steve & I will go and try to get close to this entrance. Maybe finding the rest of 2/7 will make up for not getting past the fucking op in lid.

Richard

SU 26/7/91 Bill Richard, Steve & Bill Williams

After supper 3 pissed doctors with 25 expeditions & 102 years between them set off down the Toca path. Right by the path was a hole 2yds on the left shortly after the Jullaya path leads off. William climbed down & it goes (7/10). So we carried on to a green field where there was a manhole (8/10). This time I didn't climb down. So we went down the corner to the cave which turned out to be a solution pocket. Fortunately Steve had a good memory & we climbed up to a huge easy walk-in entrance 3m x 2m which sloped down gently for 10m until it turned right. There we were stopped by lack of illumination. Resolved to return tomorrow + all the rope + bolt kit. Climbed up to top to a rabbit hole. "Throw a rock down this William" Clark "No, make it go down the hole" Clark. Struck back ecstatically to an audience believing we were on something. Is this the big one?
